

Weepowaug
The first of the islands of the Sound was the site of the first settlement in the colony. It was first discovered by the Indians who called it Weepowaug. The name is derived from the Algonquian word weepow, meaning to weep, and waug, meaning a place. The name is said to have been given to the island by the Indians because of the weeping of the winds which blow from the north and south. The name is also said to have been given to the island by the Indians because of the weeping of the winds which blow from the north and south. The name is also said to have been given to the island by the Indians because of the weeping of the winds which blow from the north and south.
